buying books online	don't stop with e-bay or Amazon . there are many sites that offer books from large numbers of dealers or individuals; half.com is a good one to begin with – they list the books from all the dealers on the same page by price within condition; you can request other types of lists. alibris and abe are for rarer (and more expensive) books. One important thing to notice is that prices diverge wildly. Condition can also be tricky; one seller will call a book "brand new" and price it high, while another's "almost new" cheaper book will be pristine, obviously never even opened flat.	go to a search engine like Google and type in "used books" and be overwhelmed

The Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh has stopped maintaining its online list of library sales.

The list served its purpose wonderfully for years, doing much to encourage the growth of library used book sales.

I am very grateful to the folks at the library, especially to Cathy Chaparro, for all the help they have given me and my SaleList.

The Library is still graciously providing a link to my Used Book Sales and Stores document, but any announcements of book sales that you used to send to Cathy should now come directly to me:

The article on Adult Attention Deficit Disorder (i.e., "Part"eimers) has been removed. It is still available online on www.pittsburghusedbooks.com; click the button for WORD or PDF and find the listing for this title.

I am seeking a replacement filler to print here.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX of Library Sales Events LAST YEAR'S LIST. I'M WORKING ON IT

The date in the “1st day” column indicates where to find a detailed listing in the chronological section that begins on page 13. If the current year appears in the “year” column, the sale will take place this year, but it isn't necessarily completely settled. Any datum in red is from last year; we are waiting for this year's information. If the entry is all in black, it is complete and correct.

on a business trip

The following essay won Ms. Oram a prize from Woman's Day Magazine and the American Library Association. A shorter version of the essay was published in the magazine along with three other winners explaining how the library had helped them go into business.

The Library Helped Me Start My Business

Helen Oram

With the help of libraries, I published a book - 3 different editions - and created a profitable web site.

Fourteen years ago, my husband and I attended a library book sale and were discussing how we could find other sales. Our family had relied on libraries - and library book sales - throughout our sons' school years, but now our sons had careers of their own - my work was finished. It was just the two of us, and book sales were still a weekend ritual.

We didn't want to miss a nearby sale, and there was no publication that listed them all. Then it struck me - I would publish one myself! Composing and publishing this information would be the entrepreneurial experience I'd always wanted.

I've always turned to the library for research, so starting there was the obvious first step. I borrowed books on self-publishing, which gave me insights into cover design, printing, and marketing. I learned the vernacular of the industry: paper quality, color considerations, print runs, pricing, negotiating with a printer, how to get a book into stores - everything a self-publisher needs to know. It was the most pleasurable - and rewarding - education I've ever received.

But I needed more than just borrowed books; our local librarians were there for me, too. With their help and direction, I found reference resources that explained yet more of the arcane aspects of book publishing: distribution, wholesaling, agents, ISBNs, copyrights, and a great deal more.

So much for the easy part. Now the bigger problem: gathering information for the book. Most used book sales are run by library Friends groups; but how would I reach them? I could write to libraries, but would need addresses. Another trip to my library and - voila! - there was a reference book, American Library Directory, filled with everything I needed.

Spring is a popular season for used book sales, so I needed to contact the libraries in January to give them time to pass the questionnaires to book sale organizers and return them to us. Throughout the 1993 holiday season, presents, wrapping paper and ribbons shared table space with questionnaires, envelopes, address labels and stamps!

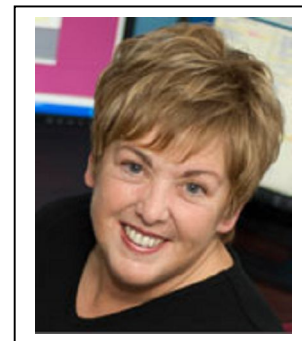

Soon the replies began pouring in. Thanks to librarians and Friends groups throughout New England, we had what we needed. And they not only gave us information; many gave us thanks and encouragement - just the boost we needed when we were tired and discouraged. The dining room table was covered with forms, schedules, and notes. We finally decided that those rooms our sons vacated needed to become our office space. Now there was no turning back (for us or our sons!).

Our 2-car garage became a 1-car garage, with copies of The Guide to Used Book Sales in New England piled on pallets. We practiced all the marketing tips learned from the self-publishing guides. Our book managed to get some nice reviews, including a mention by the New York Times Book Review!

After that, there was no stopping; we decided to go nationwide (and our work increased accordingly). The next year, copies of Book Sales in America took their place on those pallets - created, once again, from information provided to us by thousands of librarians and Friends groups across the country.

By the time we were ready to publish the 1997 edition, new information was arriving daily, so immediately after sending the book to the printer, it was already out of date. The Internet arrived right on cue; it was the perfect solution. BookSaleFinder.com was born, and we could now update the web page as soon as we learned about a sale. A few years later we expanded to include book sales in Canada as well.

Book Sale Finder is still a two-person operation and we now list over 6,000 book sales each year. I have not stepped foot into most of the libraries, but without the help from librarians and library staff from coast to coast, the books would not have been produced, the website would not exist, this story would not be written - and I would not have achieved my dream - a home-based business that is personally and financially rewarding.

1. Seeking to Buy:

I found you thru a search engine. Do you have ----- by ----- in paperback? If so, please let me know the cost...Thanks so much...

Read the document on my website, which is a list of book stores and book sales around Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. I do not sell books, I just list places where you can buy books. Have you tried <http://www.half.com/>? or <http://www.alibris.com/>? Amazon? eBay?

2. Donating old college books

I am trying to find a place to donate my old college books or at least recycle them. The books are now out of date, considering that I graduated from college almost 10 years ago.

If you have books that are not textbooks – a novel by Dickens as opposed to a textbook on Victorian Literature 101 – you may find a place to donate them. Textbooks, however, are a drug on the market unless they are currently in use at the schools, which yours would not be. Even groups that send books to developing countries don't want old textbooks, since publishers have begun donating up-to-date things and can supply enough books for an entire class. We use textbooks at my local library as construction material – propping up corners of sagging shelves, etc. Some municipalities are beginning to recycle books as raw material; check with your local "sanitation" department (see Recycling, below).

If you got my name from my website, <http://www.pittsburghusedbooks.com/>, then you know the SaleList there has contact information for booksellers and libraries, but I doubt they will have any better news for you about textbooks. You should also read "How to Donate Books", which is near the end of the SaleList.

Late Breaking News as of August, 2007: the Allegheny County Jail is looking for textbooks at any level. A few categories are forbidden: chemistry, electronics and computers. (Probably locksmithing, too.) Call the jail and ask for the librarian. Another similar institution is also looking: SCI-Pittsburgh, which is out on Beaver Ave. North Side would be interested in donation of library books. The person to contact is the Superintendent's secretary, Carol Sheray; phone: 412-761-1955, ex. 288.

3. Donating magazines

Wondering if there is a place nearby where we can donate magazines that we are done with?

That's a tough one. There are a lot of magazines in the world and most library and charity sales don't want to bother with them – they are physically difficult to deal with – heavy, hard to stack because they slide, easily ripped – and people don't want to pay much for them. If you come up with any ideas or solutions from anywhere else, I'd love to hear about them. Some ideas:

People who collect for literacy projects in other countries have problems with shipping magazines because of the weight. One I checked into, Brother's Brother, is a Pittsburgh-based outfit that has a website, where they say that they have stopped collecting used reading matter because publishers have begun to give them new stuff. Their website does say that their "customers" are still asking for used National Geographic magazines and nursing journals or medical journals. I think, though, that they mean professional journals read by nurses and doctors, not health magazines aimed at the general public.

On November 10, 2007 I received an e-mail with a good suggestion. This would work for any type of magazine at all since the clientele would be so varied (and so desperate to have something to occupy their minds) :

I take magazines to the local hospital emergency waiting room. Last time I went on a Sun. evening after clearing them out of the office/waiting area of my business, the emergency room was full [every seat taken] and not one magazine was to be found. People just came looking after I deposited several short stacks here and there on the tables. The wait can be so long [hours] that they are very much appreciated according to the intake people.

If you have very upscale magazines about art, architecture, etc., a bookstore might take them. Comics or counter-culture publications might interest Duncan Comics or Eide's. Look at my SaleList on www.pittsburghusedbooks.com, at the section on Used Book Stores.

You could ask any of the libraries in the Ongoing Sale section of the SaleList if they are interested in the specific magazines you have.

Teachers used to want magazines that younger kids could cut things out of; you might enquire at schools or day care places.

If you live near a school with a library, and you read your magazines as soon as they are published, they might like to have each copy passed on to them as soon as you read it.

You could ask your doctor, dentist, etc. – anybody with a waiting room.

There are a bunch of Pittsburgh websites that run free ads; if you have many issues of a specific magazine you might want to offer them there. www.craigslist.com is the one I can remember offhand. Be sure you zero in on your geographic area, though.

There is a movement to leave paperback books in public places with notices on them that they are free. There is a website to track the individual books and see where they end up. Maybe it could be done with magazines. I have only encountered one such book, but it was donated to our local library's book sale, not left somewhere interesting. Perhaps the rest of the country is leaving books all over the place but Pittsburgh, as always, is 5 years behind.

The shop where I get my hair cut has shelves and baskets for paperbacks and magazines people can bring in or take away. Any place that had space and was willing to do it – schools, churches, businesses, gyms, restaurants – could do the same, but people might bring a lot of garbage that would have to be weeded out and gotten rid of, so I can't see a lot of organizations doing this. If you belong to a ladies' club or a church group or something like that, though, you might see if they like the idea.

If you live in Pittsburgh, you can take magazines and catalogs to the recycling centers; of course, that's just recycling the paper, not reusing the magazines for what they were created for. See "Recycling", below.

4. Donating (vinyl) records

We have about 800 record albums to get rid of. Who might want them?

Most old records are ignored at library sales; at my local library we put them in the Free Box as soon as we get them, unless they seem special. Then we take them to Jerry for his opinion:

Jerry's Records 2136 Murray Ave, 2nd Floor Pittsburgh, PA 15217 "10,000 square feet of vinyl"
Phone: 412-421-4533 Fax: 412-421-2728 E-mail: info@jerrysrecords.com

Attic Record Store 513 Grant Ave. – Millvale, Pittsburgh, PA 15209
Phone: (412)821-8484 Fax: (412) 821-5179 E-mail: atticrecords@cs.com.

I searched the Internet and I got the impression that the sellers agree with this one:

"We are in constant need of records and will travel anywhere given sufficient quantity and quality. Because we often travel to buy records in person, we're generally interested in collections of 1000 pieces or larger. Exceptions do apply, particularly if you have a smaller number of rarer records. We require top condition, interesting titles in most genres. If you have a collection you'd like to sell, let us know the quantity, musical categories (most types of pre'85 music are of interest), source ("My relative was in the record business in 1958/68, etc" is always a good start!), and where you are located. We DON'T need 78s, or very common LPs and 45s (the biggest hits of their era) in average condition." from <http://www.recordsbymail.com/help/sellCollection.php>

Companies that gave instructions about how to sell to them had 3 methods to suggest:

- (1) "bring the records in to us"
- (2) "mail materials to us and we'll pay you 'a fair price'"
- (3) "send us a list of all titles with specific information on each one: artist, dates, record label, price you want, etc."

5. Help! Can't find ...

TEXTBOOKS:

I need a textbook for my class. Now. The local college bookstores don't have it. I don't have time to wait for it to be shipped from an online source like amazon, half.com, e-bay, etc. My local library doesn't have it in their system's catalog and I can't wait for an interlibrary loan to arrive.

Go to Google and choose Advanced Search, put the author's last name in "all these words" and the title in "exact phrase". Hit enter and look for a sponsored link for www.ichapters.com. This site sells entire books as either Text or eBook at a discount, or you can buy any chapter you need. The table of contents and first chapter are free online.

YEARBOOKS:

Is it possible to do a Pittsburgh search for a 1964 Peabody High School Yearbook? I threw mine away a long time ago and would like one again.

Your best bet would be to go on www.craigslist.com and choose Pittsburgh, then go to "wanted" and enter a request.

6. Selling My Books

My brother ... collected hardcover books and passed away most are new and many are collector's editions, since he knew what he was buying. We wanted to donate them to a library in his name, and thought there could be a plaque or something honoring him. I guess I was a little naive, since basically I was told that they would end up selling them for cash anyway.

Yes, according to the librarian at our local branch, the costs of cataloging and prepping a book for lending are prohibitive; if they buy the book from the publisher (at a large discount) they get the work done for them for free. Since the publishers all started doing that, she has stopped scanning the donations for books for the library's collection. So now if we get in something specially new-looking, we (the Friends of the Library used book sale committee) save it and sell it ourselves at a special Holiday Shopping sale in November. We are considering starting to sell on e-Bay ourselves, but haven't had the time.

I was wondering if you had any suggestions on what to do with them. We would like to hire a book expert to determine their general value, and possibly sell them as a lot.

There are a number of book dealers listed at the end of the SaleList. Some of them will come to give you a free estimate or buy some of the books, but of course any advice they give may be suspect because of their hope to make some money themselves. Esther Tucker, who with her husband ran Tucker Books on Murray Avenue for many years, is now retired from selling. She still does an occasional appraisal, however, for an hourly fee. She says:

"The time involved would depend on what the guy ultimately decides to do with the books, whether he wants a detailed appraisal for estate purposes, or whether he just wants to know which books are valuable and which aren't, and how to best dispose of the lot."

She is at tucker1214@verizon.net and at 412-521-2267.

There is also the option to donate all or some of the books to a charity and take a tax deduction of the "fair market value" of the books. If you decide to do that, the Friends of the Squirrel Hill Library would be happy to accept them (particularly if you could time your donation for shortly before we are having one of our major sales, so we wouldn't have to find storage room for the books!).

7. Tax deductions

Can I take a tax deduction for books I donate?

Yes, when you donate to a library or other charitable organization, you report the dollar value with your other charitable donations on Schedule A of your federal return. Ask the organization for a receipt. Here is how it works at my local library:

We provide a signed receipt on our letterhead, with space for you to fill in the quantities and value of various categories of donations. We do not put a value on your donations; the IRS says you must do that yourself. When I donate books to our sales, I rate the hardcovers at $2, trade (oversized) paperbacks at $1, and mass-market paperbacks at $.50, because that is what we sell them for. If the books are in like-new condition, we can sell them at the Holiday Shopping sale and then the deduction is $3/$1.50/$1. For some special books, usually art books or coffee-table books, we charge $4 or $5.

Count and record your donation as you are packing it; the library probably has no facilities for you to do it there. And as you pack, take the opportunity to make sure all the books are worth the effort. See How to Donate Books at the end of the SaleList.

8. Recycling

I am trying to find a place to recycle some old books that nobody wants to buy or accept as a donation. How do I keep them out of the landfill?

Check with your local governing body's Sanitation Department. Every location has different rules. Some municipalities let you toss paperbacks in with miscellaneous paper and will let you recycle the pages of hardcovers after you cut the covers off with a utility knife.

Pittsburgh is currently recycling hardcover books (with their covers left on) but not paperbacks!

Before 2008, you could not leave books or magazines out at the curb on trash day with the newspapers and cans and bottles. They had to be taken to one of the recycling lots around town, which have dumpsters labeled for everything mentioned here, plus: cardboard boxes (big cartons); paperboard (cereal boxes, milk cartons, etc.); phone books; junk mail and colored paper; and white "office" paper.

As of January 1, 2008, a pilot program began in the Eastern and Central divisions to collect these items at the curb on the same days (every other week) as the cans, bottles, and newspapers. There are rules for each category about how to bag or tie them; except for the cardboard, which must be tied in bundles with string, anything, including hardcover books, can be put in the blue bags with the cans and bottles. As of 4/22/08, when I checked <http://www.city.pittsburgh.pa.us/pw> for details, the Public Works website didn't seem to know about the pilot program. Call 412-255-2790 before 4 pm.

Of course, we only recycle hardcover books that can find no other home!

9. Professional Journals

I have the following publications and wondered if you have use for them or can give them a good home:

Journal of Athletic Training 1998-2000

The Physician and Sports Medicine 1995-2001

I don't buy or sell books or magazines; I only provide a list of library book sales and used book stores around Pittsburgh. I don't personally know how to find a good home for something like this. Have you tried inquiring of local schools that teach the subject, or professional associations in the field? Have you put a free ad on craigslist.com? or freecycle? See also the FAQ page on my website <http://www.pittsburghusedbooks.com/> -- the question about Magazines -- and the comment about the local philanthropic group Brothers' Brother. Perhaps these fall under the classification of magazines that are requested by their clients in other countries.

2008 Used Book Sales by date

YELLOW OR PINK background indicates sale is not yet scheduled/confirmed

Most public libraries have used book sales, either periodically or on an ongoing basis. They are usually run by a "Friends of the Library" group and survive on donations and volunteers. It may be wise to call the organization to verify date, time, and location, especially in those cases where an approximate or last year's date is given. The periodic book sales are usually large events.

Map of Pittsburgh Library Branches

This map was copied from the Carnegie Library site at www.clpgh.org. For addresses and times of operation, see page 6. For driving directions refer to the list of Ongoing Book Sales beginning on page 27, or go to the clpgh site and look up the individual branch by clicking on the symbol on the map there.

In Case You Missed the Class on Maps:

You can go online to get door-to-door driving instructions from your home to anywhere else, including the distance of each leg of the journey and estimates of the time it will take to drive.

My favorite method of getting this info:

go to www.google.com.

click on Maps above the search argument box

click on Get Directions below the new search argument box enter your starting address including city, state, and zip in the box on the left and the ending address (etc.) on the right you will get a map and a list of directions you can print.

It won't be the directions you'd get from a resident – no landmarks, no shortcuts, no avoidance of the worst traffic – but it will get you there.

The CLP website also has a link to a map of all of the municipalities in Allegheny County, which may be of help in locating libraries from this document. See <http://www.county.allegheny.pa.us/munimap/profile.asp?muni=56>.

Libraries With Ongoing Sales

I have not called these libraries in 2008 to find out if any of the data have changed.
I'd welcome a volunteer who can do that. Margie Spenser 412-521-4129

Has a small online inventory of 1250 books, consisting mostly of the more obscure and valuable titles. Online items are not viewable in the store, but a 20% discount is offered to walk-in customers who wish to purchase an online listing. There are 20,000 titles in the store, a mixture of soft and hardcover, with a wide variety of fiction and non-fiction, alphabetized and categorized. Their specialty, a large mystery/suspense selection, also includes a subsection of cozy mysteries. They offer two-for-one trade on desired items, and do not require a cash portion at this time. They also pay cash, usually half of the trade offer. In-store prices run from a minimum of $1.00 up to $6.00 with a few higher priced items. Mass market pb's are generally half cover price. They also offer a bargain/ clearance rack, and a frequent shopper punch card, with 10% back in books.

How to Donate Books

Don't leave donated materials on the sale shelves. It screws up the system a lot.

Give them to a library staff member or a Friends of the Library volunteer, who can also give you a tax receipt.

Shoot Your Own Dog

In the classic frontier tale Old Yeller, the beloved hound is bitten while fighting off a rabid wolf who is attacking the hero's mother and sister. The boy is devastated when his mother says Old Yeller must be shot to prevent spreading the deadly disease, but he forces himself to accept the truth, put aside sentiment, and do what is needed. Later his father helps him to see that "that's how life is a part of the time...A man can't afford to waste all the good part, worrying about the bad parts". Sometimes you gotta do what you gotta do. So, here's what you gotta do. When you pack up donations of used books and magazines to donate to the Library, please Shoot Your Own Dog. Get rid of the books that have no future; don't bring them to the Library for execution. It's too hard on volunteers' souls.

But Be Sure He's Yours

When we find a book that seems still to belong to a library or other institution, before we can sell it we have to contact them to discover whether it has been withdrawn from their collection. This is very time-consuming and sometimes difficult.

Please make sure "library books" are marked "withdrawn" or something similar before you pass them on to us.

Printing it Doesn't Make it Sacred

People won't buy photocopied things. Supplemental readings from classes, texts used in in-service training, anything your broker sends you in the mail, CATALOGS, the complete list of alumni from your college or members of your professional organization have all served their purposes. Let them go. People who are looking for this information will look on the Internet or get it where you got it.

Watch Out for Infection

MILDEW IS ALIVE. If your books are damp, smelly, or have dark dots and splotches, they are not only unmarketable, they are dangerous to other books. They must be thrown away immediately, and the library has to pay for trash collection, so it is unkind to donate them.

Appearance Counts

What makes a book pleasant to hold? Flat pages, strong binding, no water damage, paper that doesn't flake, no smell, no stickiness or grime, a spine with few crease lines – these are all basic to most people's enjoyment of the physical experience of holding a book. It is possible to overlook some problems if the book is very special, but be honest – would you lend it to your mother-in-law?

Please stack donations in a box or a paper bag. Snugly. Flat.

Plastic bags, especially trash bags, do awful things to books. Once books are bent, they can't be sold.

Know What You are Donating

Check boxes to be sure there is nothing in them by mistake. Finding old photos we can't return makes us sad. Live things scare us. On the other hand, I found my two best paring knives in boxes of books (months apart!).

Some Things Just Don't Sell

NO TEXTBOOKS. If they are more than two or three years old, nobody wants to buy them. If they are newer, you should take them to a college bookstore or one of the used textbook stores near a college campus. You can make some money, and the books are more likely to reach the right audience. The exceptions are items with unique features. We had a chemistry textbook written by Nobel Laureate Linus Pauling ... that was interesting. We had no problem selling a fifth grade health/hygiene text from 1910; it was fascinating. If a textbook is useful as a reference book because of an excellent glossary or an appendix with extraordinarily well organized information, attach a note about its special features. If it isn't worth the time to do that, why are you giving it to us?? NO ENCYCLOPEDIAS – nobody buys them.

NO VOLUME I WITHOUT A VOLUME II. NO "AARDVARK – AZALEA" FROM A SUPERMARKET SERIES YOU DECIDED NOT TO KEEP BUYING. NO INSTRUCTION MANUALS. NO COLORING BOOKS WITH PAGES COLORED!

Would you: Buy based on Consumer Reports studies from 1995? Stay at a hotel recommended by a guide book from 1975? Settle bets about "world records" with a Guinness Book from 1980? Then look in our FREE box; we can't find many people who will buy these things, so that's why we say NO OUTDATED ATLASES, TRAVEL BOOKS, PRICE LISTS FOR COLLECTORS, ETC. unless they are so old that they are of historical interest. Nobody wants to read about which mutual funds to buy last year.

and Some Things Shouldn't Sell

If you purchased this book without a cover, you should be aware that this book is stolen property. It was reported as "unsold and destroyed" to the publisher, and neither the author nor the publisher has received any payment for this "stripped book."

← This is a notice found inside many paperbacks.

Books with the front covers ripped off go straight into the trash, no matter how badly we want to read them ourselves.
